Summer Camp and Your Child

Summer is just around the corner, so it is time to start planning those summer activities. Camp experiences are wonderful opportunities for creating lifetime memories, but camp also offers children the opportunity to learn new skills, build on existing skills, deepen their self-confidence and broaden their independence. Finding just the right one for your child with special needs may be challenging. The first step is to decide what type of camp you and your child are interested in: day camp, overnight camp, therapeutic day camp and special interest camps are all options that you may want to consider.

Here are some questions you may want to ask:

Are there any medical professionals on site?

How close is the nearest hospital?

How are special dietary needs accommodated?

What types of training do the camp counselors/staff receive?

Who will dispense medication?

Is staff available to assist with feeding, toileting?

What is the camper to counselor/staff ratio?

What are the costs and is funding assistance available?

How does the program ensure an inclusive environment?

What activity alternatives are available to participants, should an activity not be appropriate?

It is important to remember that having a special need does not have to exclude your child from enjoying a summer camp experience. Finding just the right program for your child may take some time and can be a difficult process. Searching the internet and using tools such as the American Camp Association's Find a Camp (www.acacamps.org) can help you in your search. The National Dissemination Center for Children with Disabilities (<http://nichcy.org>) also offers links to camps that are designed for children with special needs. Operation Military Kids (OMK) and the National Military Family Association (NMFA) offer a wonderful program called Operation Purple Camp (www.militaryfamily.org). These camp experiences are free and available to military youth with parents who have been, are currently or will be deployed. The application includes places to document special needs or accommodations that your child requires. Operation Purple Camps do partner with outside care partners to offer an inclusive experience for all children.
